THE WAYS OF THE "BEAST."
Ben Butler as a Financier.

[From the New Orleans Picayune, Dec. 10.]
Ben Butler is a ready financier. If Gen. Grant wished to do his duty to the country he would have appointed Ben to the Treasury. The country would have been better off, for if Ben Butler had been in the Treasury, he would have raised the means in one way or another. He would have raised money to the dying credit of the nation, and infused an energy into our commercial affairs that would have been felt from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf to the Canadian. Ben, several times, commanded the department of which his city was the center, and many a time and oft was sorely pressed for funds with which to carry on his little government, and above all, to assist his brother Andy. But Ben was not so sorely pressed that he could not devise means to relieve the pressure. One morning as Ben sat quietly enjoying his Havana and sadly contemplating the remains of a good breakfast, his brother in law, who had just entered the apartment, said: "Ben, I must have $10,000 immediately. A schooner leaves to-day for Mandeville, and I want to send a quantity of powder to the rebels and procure a return cargo of cotton."
Now Ben was broke, and it was with a sad expression that he looked down at the clock. He slowly removed his eye from his mouth and in a gentle voice replied:
"Andy, I haven't a cent."
There were several letters on the table, but he did not open them. He opened the third letter, and his eyes glinted with a beautiful light and his pale face flushed with excitement. He held up to the gaze of his astonished brother a foreign bill for $10,000, and exclaimed with innocent delight:
"I have it, Andy. Here is a package of letters taken from the captured blockade runner Fox. This is one addressed to a leading foreign house and contained this bill. This is smuggling. I will send an officer there immediately, surrender the bill, and for smuggling fine them the amount you wish."
He tapped his little bell and sent for Captain B., to whom he intrusted the delicate mission. The Captain immediately visited the leading partner of the offending firm and informed him that his letters had been intercepted, and his attempts at smuggling detected. He then produced the bill of exchange and added that the firm could have it upon the payment of $10,000, which amount the General had fined them. If they didn't pay the money immediately, their goods and store would be confiscated. Seeing no remedy or recourse the merchant reluctantly paid the money over. As he handed the check to Captain B., he demanded a receipt. "We are not thieves, gentlemen," the officer retorted, drawing himself up and assuming his dearest look. "We are not thieves," and turned and left the office. Andy took the money, put the powder forward, and obtained his cotton in return. Several months after this occurrence, General Johnson was sent here by the Government to investigate the most serious of the many complaints against General Butler and his officers. The day of his arrival Captain B. hurriedly entered the office of the foreign firm and excitedly exclaimed: "B. B. can you furnish me with the amount of the fine you paid the Government through General Butler?" The figures were given, and he departed as quickly as he entered. The next day receipts duly signed and countersigned by the proper authorities were sent to the office of the unfortunate firm.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTOR OF MINTS.

We are in possession of the Annual Report of H. R. Lindeman, Director of Mints, which contains a full and complete statement of the operations of the Government mints and assay offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1873. It is a most interesting and instructive report, respecting the coinage since the first establishment of the Parent Mint in 1793. From its pages we learn that the total amount of gold and silver coined and purchased, coins struck, and stamped bars manufactured during the fiscal year was $72,354,818, distributed as follows:

Mint, Philadelphia.....$21,431,054
" San Francisco.....17,329,278
" Carson.....9,452,329

The expenses have been:

Philadelphia.....$475,091
San Francisco.....300,429
Carson.....137,061
Philadelphia.....66,944

The coinage of the trade dollar of silver was designed expressly for export, but a large number are to be found in general circulation in this State and California. They have been shipped, to some extent, to China and Japan, and have received there, and been formally recognized by the Chinese Government as a legal tender for duties and mercantile purposes, being 1-14 per cent. better than the Mexican dollar. It is generally supposed that the mine of the world produces, annually, about one hundred millions of gold, and the consumption of gold in the arts is admitted to be twenty-five millions per annum. From the most reliable data obtainable, the gold coin in the country is estimated at $135,000,000, and silver coin at $5,000,000. Director Lindeman, in the conclusion of his report, says: "I must express my satisfaction that, though we have several hundred employees, performing various duties connected with the workings of the precious metals, not a single case of em-
